Q12.	In 2010, Twentieth Century Fox and other parties (Fox) sued British-based Newzbin for copyright infringement on the basis that the Newzbin website operated to locate and identify unlawful copies of films online and then display the titles of those files, allowing visitors to the website to acquire unlawful copies of the films by clicking on the link provided. Newzbin created a new type of digital file called NZB, which operates on similar principles to torrent files, but are specifically for use with Usenet. Usenet is an internet discussion system which allows users to post and view messages on the Usenet system. In simple terms, the Usenet system works by interconnecting a series of servers (Usenet servers), and messages posted on the Usenet system are exchanged between the Usenet servers, which are regularly synchronised. Any content uploaded to the Usenet servers is stored in a hierarchy of newsgroups that are named to indicate their content. Members of Newzbin are provided with a report regarding the content available via Usenet upon logging in to the website. Analyze the liability of British-based Newzbin for copyright infringement with the help of relevant cases and provisions.	20	CO4
